PERSONAL PROFILE

Liz has always been drawn to the arts and sciences. Exploring architecture as a multi-sensory experience as well as how architecture fits into and its role within the landscape was an area of particular focus. A four-month study abroad experience took her to Rome, where she studied in-depth the ancient and modern urban fabric of the Eternal City. Liz then first interned with VMWP in SF where she developed an early affection for affordable housing. Returning to Cal Poly for her final year, she studied corporeal engagement within architecture and the natural world. Upon graduation, Liz moved back home to the mountains where she enjoys spending her free time outdoors, drawing, painting and playing ultimate frisbee.
