As an urban designer with Van Meter Williams Pollack, Andrew contributes to projects ranging from streetscape design and placemaking for market-rate and affordable development to planning frameworks for local governments. Andrew's diverse experience allows him to serve VMWP as a utility player on both architecture and planning projects and ensures continuity across disciplines.

PERSONAL PROFILE

Andrew believes that the potential of design is realized through the creation of unique and sustainable places to live, work, and inhabit, and that successful design must work across scales from the room to the city beyond. Andrew's passion lies in the creation of communities that are walkable, inclusive, and sustainable.

Prior to joining VMWP, Andrew was responsible for creating client value through the successful entitlement of over 200 multifamily housing units. He has experience in contexts ranging from non-profit community design and advocacy, to production multifamily residential design and luxury interiors. Andrew is a former adjunct professor in architecture and urban design (2010-2012) at Washington University in St. Louis, past Vice Chair of the City to River urban design advocacy group, and current contributor to the TraceSF journal of Bay Area Urbanism. Outside of work Andrew devotes his time to exploring cities, making furniture and fixtures, biking, hiking, and gardening.
